DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This once handsome two story frame house stands on the south side of Club Hollow Road, about fifteen yards from the road. Its facade is oriented towards the road, and the axis of its gable roof line runs east-west. The site is no longer maintained, and the house looks abandoned, though it is still occupied.

The facade consists of three bays: a door centrally located flanked by two double hung sash windows with four over four lights and with louvered shutters. Above the two windows on the ground floor are similar ones above. The results is a symmetrical arrangement quite popular in the Martinsburg area and elsewhere in Maryland and the nation near the turn of the 19th century. The house today is unpainted, but in earlier years the house was whitewashed, if not painted.

The house is frame, as seen between the broken weatherboards, and presumably it is balloon frame, though a close investigation was not possible without the occupant/owner's permission. In plan, the house appears to be similar to others in the area: a central hallway with two rooms one either side with matching rooms above.

A cross gable pediment gives accent to the facade. Stove flues ascend inside each gable end. The smoke rising from the west chimney, even during warm weather, indicates that at least one stove is still in use.

No examination of the interior was possible, and the exterior was seen only from the road.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The primary importance of this house is that it stands as another example of the type built by Black landowners near the turn of the 19th century. It should be seen in the context of the other houses in Martinsburg community, and should be compared to the smaller log houses of the landless farmers and to the first houses of small Black landowners, such as the log houses of the Fairfax family or Thompson family in Martinsburg.

Deeds in the County Courthouse in Rockville show that the property was sold by Eugene Hughes to Patrick Dorsey in 1887 (L/F: J.A. 9/71) (2 acres). Eugene Hughes is not shown on the 1879 Hopkins map, nor is this tract. According to local oral informant, Lemuel Graham who was born just a short distance down the road in 1894, this house was built by the Dorsey family when he was "about five or six years old", i.e., c. 1900.

In 1946 the property was sold by the McPherson family to Henry Scott, in whose name the title still remains (L/F: 1095/458).

If possible, the construction of this house warrants further study since it has been reliably dated and could tell us the types of construction methods and materials used to build Black landowners' houses of the turn of the century. Such information would provide insights into their economic condition.
